DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

1. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

2. Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Imai et al. (US Patent no. 6715666).

Imai et al. teaches a wire bonding method comprising: forming a bump on a second conductor by ball bonding on the second conductor while positioning the capillary above the second conductor; forming an inclined surface on the upper end of the bump by moving the capillary upwards, laterally moving the capillary to the side of the bump away from the first conductor, and moving the capillary downwards, followed by cutting the wire; first bonding one end of the wire to the first conductor; then the wire is looped from the first conductor to the bump and second bonding the wire extending from the bore of the capillary and the inclination surface of the bump by means of a lower end portion of the capillary while positioning the capillary at the inclination surface of the bump, and cutting the wire at a portion thereof near the bonded portion.

(Fig. 2(A –G), Fig. 7(E – G); Column 2, lines 36 –54 and abstract).

Imai et al. does not specifically disclose the step, raising the capillary to a height that is equal to or lower than the height that is equal or lower than the height of the ball portion that rises into a through- hole of the said capillary during the formation of the bump. According to the embodiment of the method of forming the inclined surface on the bump, Imai et al. discloses a step wherein in, the capillary is raised vertically to a height above the second conductor, laterally moving the said capillary to the side of said bump away from the first conductor (Fig. 5(A – D); lines, 54 -65). This disclosure inevitably and inherently would have the steps to accomplish the formation of inclined surface on the bump.

Conclusion

The Prior art made record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. (US Patent no. 5485949)
